

I do NOT want the current "Do Not Call" lists weakened. In fact, I would like to have it extended further to include everything that is not specifically initiated by me. This would include political phone calls, business solicitation, charity solicitation, etc. If I'm interested in what they have to "sell, then I will contact them. When I am home, it is MY time to do as I please, not to constantly answer the phone for businesses, charities, politicians who are unable to do effective advertise via media channels, and I do not believe my phone should qualify as a media channel. As such, I believe the DO NOT CALL list should mean exactly that for everyone soliciting anything, DO NOT CALL me!

If they would be willing to pay me a significant penalty (ie: $100 everytime they call made payable directly to me), I might change my mind. Anything less is not worth my time. Obviously, this would not be a cost-beneficial method of solicitation. By the way, I would expect that price to be adjusted with inflation and could substantially increase (from my perspective) over time.

PS: The "Do Not Call" lists should apply to cell phones, as well home phones. Otherwise, once everyone gets their points across regarding home phones (by disconnecting their home phone service), the solicitors will begin to lobby for the rights to attack cell users.